

PITCHFORK DUEL IN RIDING CLUB MAY BE FATAL

Christmas Tips Cause of a Desperate Encounter Between Hostlers.

There was a battle with pitchforks as weapons in the aristocratic Riding Club, at No. 7 East Fifty-eighth street, today in which Thomas Connolly was probably fatally injured by a fellow member, James Cassidy, of No. 78 Seventh avenue.

Cassidy is forty-one years old and Connolly thirty, and from the moment they set eyes on each other had blood shed up between them. The younger man became a great favorite with the members of the club, whereas Cassidy, with his greater experience, was unpopular.

The bitterness between the two hostlers was increased when Connolly received liberal Christmas tips and Cassidy not so much. On several occasions the men came to blows, but these encounters were held owing to the interference of the foreman.

Demanding His Pitchfork.

When Cassidy came to work this morning he noticed that Connolly had a pitchfork he had been in the habit of using.

"Give me that pitchfork," he shouted at his enemy.

Connolly met the request with an oath, whereupon Cassidy seized a pitchfork from a neighboring stall and rushed upon the younger man. Connolly met the rush by bringing down his fork on Cassidy's head, sending him to the floor.

Cassidy got up and with a cry of rage thrust the prongs of his pitchfork in Connolly's face. One of the tips entered Connolly's right eye and penetrated to the brain.

Cassidy made no attempt to run away, thinking that the wound was only a slight one and family went about his work as usual. Foreman McGovern, however, and some of the witnesses were alarmed at Connolly's condition and telephoned the Flower Hospital, telling the hospital people that a man had been kicked on the head by a horse. Dr. Reed made a hurried run to the stable. He examined Connolly and could not find any abrasion or other wound to indicate that the man had been kicked and was perplexed over the case, when he opened the eyes to look at the pupils and found that in one corner of the right eye there was a hole piercing the eye almost imperceptibly, but a hasty examination convinced him that what ever had caused the wound had also penetrated the brain.

Connolly was apparently in a dying condition, and he telephoned the coroner, who also to the East Fifty-eighth street police station.

Said It Was Connolly.

Dr. Reed hurried his patient to the Flower Hospital, but found that he could do little in the way of relief. He used "Cannula" to find any abrasion and the injured man refused to say. Then he asked who did it, and the answer was that he could not remember the name. When the coroner arrived he questioned Connolly further, and finally asked if Cassidy had hit him, and was told at once that was the man who had done it.

The police did not know of the pitchfork duel until Surgeon Reed, of the hospital, called up the East Fifty-first street station and notified them that the wounded man could live only a few hours. Then Police Marine went to the Riding Club and arrested Cassidy, who was taken to the hospital to be identified by his victim before the coroner took his ante-mortem statement.

Cassidy was arraigned before Magistrate Mayo in Yorkville Court, charged with felonious assault. He said he struck in self-defense. When Magistrate Mayo learned that Connolly's chances of life were slight he held the man without bail.

TO CUT TANGLE OF EVERETT HOUSE

Judge Holt Will Decide if Mr.
Flannery or the Receiver
Shall Run Business.

Judge Holt, of the United States District Court, will decide to-day whether J. P. Flannery, who bought the Everett House business for $2,500, is better entitled to keep possession of it than the receiver who was appointed by the judge on Monday, on the application of creditors who hold $40,000 of debts against the former management.

The only question is said to be whether Mr. Flannery bought the business before the receiver was appointed.

Several women beside the mysterious caller who demanded her $2,500 back have called at the hotel since Mr. Flannery took charge, and have asked for the whereabouts of J. H. Siebert, who was manager of the Everett House Company up to the time of the mortgage sale.

"Siebert was a financier," said Mr. Flannery today. "J. M. McCarthy, who was one of the incorporators of the Everett House Company, was also a financier. Those two men used to see visions of million-dollar profits, and they took the money they made and put it in Wall Street."

Mr. Park, the manager here, tells me that there is a report in the United States who could make head or tail of the books left by the Everett House Company. The hotel is making money and always has made money. Bates dropped it in May to go to the Hotel Belmont and the business has been a check drawn for the last six weeks.

"Siebert had a lot of fashionable friends. Several of them have been around here in the last twenty-four hours asking about him. The last time I saw Siebert, which was yesterday, he said he was going to Buffalo."

"Everything is quiet here. The hotel is running exactly as usual. Do I pay the $40,000 worth of bills? Well, I should say not."

Our Greatest Sale of Undermuslins And Kindred Lines of White Goods.

Record-breaking in the size of the stocks provided and especially so in the values. Contracts for such enormous stocks had to be made months ago—in some instances a full year ago. Since then all lines of Linen and Cotton Goods have soared—prices have advanced considerably.

Macy White Sale prices do not reflect those advances.

The underpricing is truly extraordinary. In scores of cases patrons of this White Sale can own staple merchandise for less than we would have to pay to duplicate it in to-day's markets.
